

How to Start an Analysis Essay Example

Essay Topic: Why is Euthanasia So Debated?

Although medicine has reached the level when many diseases can be cured or at least effectively stopped, there are cases when nothing can help a patient survive. Terminal diseases such as cancer or AIDS, if not attended in time, can cause a person's body to slowly degrade: organs shut down, the ever-increasing pain becomes unbearable, and sometimes life support apparatus is the only option doctors have to keep a patient from passing away. There are cases when people spend years connected to such an apparatus without any chance of being cured, or even if they are not hooked up to apparatus, they have to withstand excruciating pain—and not all patients (as well as their relatives) are able to continue living this way. This is where the widely-debated procedure of euthanasia comes in: sometimes, the seemingly best decisions doctors, patients, and family members can agree upon is to let the terminally-ill person die voluntarily, and modern medicine can make this process as easy as possible.